ABOUT THE CONFERENCE

I were to look over the whole world to find out the country most richly endowed with all the wealth, power and beauty that nature can bestow—in some parts a heavenly paradise on earth—I should point to India.

If I were asked under what sky the human mind has most fully developed some of its choicest gifts, has most deeply pondered on the greatest problems of life, and has found solutions of some of them which well deserve the attention of even those who have studied Plato and Kant, I should point to India. Friedrich Max Muller

For the evolution of natural sciences, the first and foremost requirement is "technical language" or what is also known as "artificial language" and the artificial language of the Sanskrit grammar composed by the Indian linguist Pāṇini. Pāṇini's grammar composed by him from the mathematical sciences that is different with artificial languages in the Euro-Americas; and was, furthermore, not composed in Europe. Hence artificial or formal languages exist across sciences and civilizations.

Along with natural sciences Vedas are a rich source of Cognitive sciences as well, as the Advaita Vedāntins consider knowledge primarily to be formless (nirākāra), and determination-less (nirviseśa). They accept the reality of pure consciousness, which is eternal in nature and thus not different from the Self. However, this is not conceivable in the system of Nyāya philosophy. The Naiyāyikas think that the knowledge is a quality of the Self and thus it is self-owned (ātmāsraya). It is object-dependent (savisaṃyaka) and object-determinant (saviseśa). Knowledge is produced by its causal mechanism (pramāṇa) and thus it is janya (a product)
